New Amazon warehouse may bring hundreds of jobs

Oct 3, 2019, 3:27pm EDT

Deltona soon may become an Amazon town.

Seattle-based e-commerce giant Amazon.com Inc. (Nasdaq: AMZN) plans to build an 85-acre, 1.4 million-square-foot warehouse between Interstate 4 and Normandy Boulevard, south of Graves Avenue. If it receives city approval this month, the new fulfillment center may bring hundreds of jobs to Deltona.

Amazon representatives declined to comment; city of Deltona officials and Atlanta-based developer Seefried Industrial Properties didn't respond to requests for comment.

However, Seefried is a preferred builder for Amazon — including developing fulfillment centers in Orlando's Lake Nona; Salt Lake City; Nashville, Tennessee; Macon, Georgia; and Richmond, Virginia.

The Deltona facility is expected to create numerous jobs and become the city's "largest private employer" — meaning private industry — according to city documents. Raleigh, North Carolina-based Kimley-Horn & Associates Inc. is the project engineer, according to Deltona documents.

Though it wasn't revealed how many jobs the new distribution center will spur, a 2.3 million-square-foot, four-story Amazon Robotics fulfillment center in Lake Nona created roughly 1,500 full-time jobs. Amazon warehouse positions generally pay $15 an hour.

But it remains to be seen how effective these jobs will be in growing the Deltona area's economy. Amazon's fulfillment center openings can add 30% more warehousing and storage jobs in an area but no new net jobs, according to a February 2018 paper by Economic Policy Institute. That's because the warehouse and storage jobs are "likely offset" by job losses in other industries.

Amazon on its website argued that its $160 billion in U.S. investments have created more than 360,000 spinoff jobs in sectors such as construction, health care and professional services.

Additionally, Deltona and nearby cities likely will attract more future industrial real estate development as land becomes scarce near Orlando's urban core. Industrial is a hot real estate sector, mostly because of the e-commerce boom led by Amazon. Retailers want distribution centers closer to customers so they can deliver products faster, which is why new users are lining up for industrial space.

"We'll start to see distribution in southern Volusia County," said industrial expert Larry Kahn, senior director of Tampa-based Franklin Street in Orlando, who isn't involved in the deal. "It's the next logical place."

Meanwhile, Amazon's Central Florida presence is growing. It plans to open a 115,280-square-foot logistics and distribution center at the northwest corner of Grand Street and South Orange Blossom Trail in Orlando. And the e-commerce giant on Sept. 26 opened a 66,000-square-foot facility in Daytona Beach.

To be sure, Central Florida's overall population and business growth have driven demand for warehouses, distribution centers and manufacturing plants. More than 21 million people live within 250 miles of the Interstate 4 corridor between Daytona Beach and Tampa, which is creating requirements for more industrial space, Colliers International Central Florida (Nasdaq: CCI) said.

FRANK H. CONLON

Amazon may become the largest private employer in Deltona if the city commission approves a massive warehouse for the e-commerce user.

HH Holdings LLC, a subsidiary of Halifax Health, bought 31 acres in Deltona in preparation for building a new hospital.

Trafalgar Holdings LLC, an entity of Orlando-based Property Investment Brokers, sold the parcel last week for $4.5 million, said Bobby Luthra, Property Investment Brokers' director of operations. The land is near the intersection of Interstate 4 and Howland Boulevard.

The Florida Agency for Health Care Administration has not received a certificate of need application from Halifax Health, said Shelisha Coleman, AHCA press secretary.

Meanwhile, Bowley said development plans for the hospital have not been filed with the city yet. "There's no anticipated timeline. We've been talking to the landowner for some time now, and we've been on the side waiting for this day to come. We're glad it's finally here."

Meanwhile, earlier this year Halifax Health announced plans to open a new hospice in Orlando.

Currently, Florida Hospital Fish Memorial is the only hospital in the Deltona area. However, Central Florida Regional Hospital announced on Nov. 12 that it will build a 12-bed, freestanding emergency center in Deltona, which would be modeled after Oviedo ER. This led to speculation that Central Florida Regional Hospital's parent company, HCA Holdings Inc., was eyeing Deltona for a new hospital.
